Dr. iur. en Avignon 29.4.1611 et agrégé⁴. Jane MACAVOCK schreibt als Notiz zu einem Portrait, gemalt von Nicolas Mignard (1606-1668): „....The delicacy of the depiction of the hair and the emphasis put on the psychology of the sitter were distinguishing features in the portraits painted by Nicolas Mignard in Avignon. The eyes — blue in the portrait of Federico Sforza (ill. 3), in his Self Portrait (ill. 4) and in our painting — with the irides encircled by a black brushstroke, are painted with precision. The similarities in the treatment of paint in the artist's Self Portrait and in our painting are visible despite the thick layers of varnish which seal the paint on both these canvases. The white impastos on the cheeks are visible in both portraits. Differently from what was argued in a 1997 publication, the profession of the sitter in his Self Portrait is clearly hinted at in the painting: indeed, it is possible to discern a palette in the bottom right corner of the composition. Mignard's Self Portrait similarly displays the artist's interest in the kaleidoscopic properties of paint, which is exemplified by his use of a variety of colours that he superimposed in order to depict different complexions. An inscription from the 19th century (ill. 5) that was glued to the back of our portrait provides us with precious information in regards to the sitter. It identifies him as Gabriel Teste, son of Jean, who was born in Pernes on 14 May 1588 and who died in Avignon on 14 September 1658. A black wax seal showing the coat of arms of the Teste family informs us that the painting remained in the hands of the sitter's progeny at least until the 19th century. Jean Teste, born in a Piedmontese family which moved to Pernes-les-Fontaines (Vaucluse) in the 15th century, worked as a solicitor in Pernes from 1598 until 1610. His son Gabriel was the first of a long list of eminent jurists and registered professors. Gabriel's son, Claude, was the first member of the family to become head of the University of Avignon. The inscription indicates the wedding date of Gabriel Teste, 20 September 1612, of which we found further evidence in the registers of the Parish Saint-Agricol d'Avignon (which was also the parish of Mignard's family). The parochial registers of Saint-Agricol indicate that Gabriel Teste was buried at the Église des Cordeliers in Avignon. Our sitter obtained the title of doctor of law on 29 April 1611. His appointment testifies to his prominent status in the University as well as in the city. It is interesting to notice that within this prestigious university circle he could have met another of Mignard's sitters, Pierre-François de Tonduti de Saint-Léger. The evidence suggests that Teste established himself solidly in the Parish of Saint-Agricol d'Avignon. However, the private mansion that bears the name of this family today (sis 9 and 11, Rue de la Croix), was bought by François-Joseph de Teste (1721-1802) only after 1740. This building remained in the possession of the family until the mid-19th century, when it actually belonged to Jules François Catelin and César de Teste, both lawyers. Jules Teste, who died on 10 May 1842, was the administrator of the Foundation Calvet, to which he donated some paintings attributed to Vernet and to which his brother gifted some papers, manuscripts and etchings on the history of Avignon (today in the library of Ceccano). On the other hand, the private mansion that belonged to Antoine Joseph de Teste, the last head of the University of Avignon, was seized during the Revolution. An inventory made on 28 August 1793 mentions the painting in multiple instances but unfortunately it does not provide any further information in this regard⁵.

Le changement de religion de son père (lui) fit déserter sa maison, pour venir se réfugier à Pernes, où elle avait une soeur appelée Suffrette, mariée avec M. Jean Teste, notaire de cette ville, comme il appert par un acte d'acquit que led. Sr. Teste fit a noble Gedeon Coulet, son beau – frère, le 5. dec. 1587 ⁶).

Jean was born in a Piedmontese family which moved to Pernes-les-Fontaines (Vaucluse) in the 15th century, worked as a solicitor / notaire in Pernes from 1598 until 1610. Am 18.1.1564 und am 27.8.1571 ist Antoine Teste als Notar in Pernes tätig⁷; Charles Teste als Notar am 6.8.1537⁸ - wohl nähere Verwandte von Jean.
